Biographical Narrative

Charles R. “Chic” Courter was born on April 24, 1889 in San Miguel, San Luis Obispo County, California to John P. and Mary Courter. He had two older brothers, Wilkie and John. His father worked as a merchant, businessman, and as postmaster for San Miguel.

In January 1906, at the age of seventeen, Courter left San Miguel for San Francisco where he worked in the shipping department of a department store until the earthquake and fire destroyed the city. He then worked as a sign painter, at a music company, as a streetcar conductor, and as a vaudeville piano player in Oakland until he joined a traveling medicine show. The show included vaudeville acts and traveled primarily throughout the smaller cities of California in order to avoid paying license fees. It was while traveling through the town of Lindsay, near Bakersfield, that Courter met his future wife Edith Jack. The couple had three daughters, Carola, Katherine, and Dorothy.

After a couple of years of traveling with the medicine show, Courter changed professions when he accepted a job as a reporter for a start-up newspaper in Burlingame, where his brother John worked as a printer. He gained valuable experience in Burlingame and soon accepted a position as the city editor of the San Mateo Times. During this time, Courter continued his interest in show business, when he organized local theater groups. Several newspaper jobs followed until 1936 when he moved to Roseville to work for the Roseville Tribune and Register. In 1940 Courter joined the staff of the Roseville Press which later merged with the Roseville Tribune and Register to become the Roseville Press-Tribune.

Courter wrote a daily column, the “Chowder Kettle,” and served as sports editor for the Roseville Press-Tribune until he retired in 1965. He also promoted local baseball and supported the City of Roseville Recreation Department as a softball announcer and official scorekeeper.

His contact with the Recreation Dept. led to a request from the recreation director that Courter organize a local amateur theater group. In 1948 he organized the Roseville Little Theater Guild. The next year the Spotlights theater group formed and in 1953 the two groups merged into the Roseville Civic Repertory Theatre under the sponsorship of the City of Roseville Recreation Department. The group soon dropped the “Repertory” from its name. The group performed at the Veterans Memorial Hall, the Parent-Teacher Building at Roseville Union High School, and the Atlantic Street School until the city built a new recreation building in Royer Park in 1960.

Charles R. “Chic” Courter died on February 1, 1980 at the Eskaton Manzanita Manor in Carmichael, California.
